

Dr. Terri Hamm is a Core Faculty member at Walden University. She has been at Walden for three years, but has been a counselor educator for more than ten years. She brings significant experience to her teaching as a licensed professional clinical counselor and supervisor (LPCC-S).

Dr. Hamm earned her PhD at Kent State University in Counselor Education, and she earned her MEd at the University of Toledo. She has experience working with families, children, adolescents, adults, and groups with mental health and addiction disorders. She has worked in a variety of rural and urban settings including community mental health agencies, social service agencies, public and private schools, and a hospital.

Dr. Hamm's most recent published article investigated clinical supervision techniques in substance abuse treatment. She frequently speaks at conferences, and she has numerous presentations at state, national, and international conferences on clinical supervision and family counseling.